

'Good morning, ladies and gentleman, and welcome on board this journey into my glamorous lifestyle ...

'Please sit back, relax and enjoy the flight and if there is anything more I can tell you to help you make your decision to become a cabin crew member, please let me know when you see me walking through the cabin one day or else crossing your path on the street. I will be very happy to tell you more stories and answer all your questions concerning this so called-glamorous job of mine.'

Bring Out the Glamour offers a lively , funny, sardonic but accurate picture of a low-paid, body-crushing, soul-eating profession, shedding light on the health problems this job is responsible for and how it can affect people's personalities, day-to-day lives and relationships.

Written out of the author's personal experience it gives a unique insight into a previously little known aspect of women's working lives.

Although the book deals with a serious and sometimes grim subject, all four of the main characters, Penny, Charlie, Lilly and Sally, approach life with irony and humour.

The message of this story is clear: know what you are getting into before signing a suicide contract that will change your life and that of people close to you.

Flying around the world, staying in five-star hotels and w different people all the time can be fun, and is certainly (the only way one can really enjoy it and make the best out of it is by having a positive attitude towards it and a great deal of awareness towards what airlines nowadays can really offer – and the price one must pay in accepting such an offer.
